Bio: Born in Genoa, Italy in 1957, former pro basketball player, olimpic silver medalist in Moskow 1980, European Champion in 1983, from 1995–2000 commissioner of italian and european basketball players association, 2002–2009 sport commentator for RAITV, 2009–20013 commissioner of Legadue, italian basketball league.*

Background: I traveled most of the world for business and leisure, mostly in beautiful hotels, but I was missing those things that only a private home can offer: exclusive objects, carefully selected food and a host to help you enjoy your vacation. If you share my passion for high class hospitality, gourmet food and wine, great outdoors and unforgettable sunsets, come to Sycily and be my guest in the golden town of Noto and the island Pantelleria, the dugther of the wind.*

Pantelleria, Sicily, Italy

Pantelleria, Sicilia

Phoenicians called it Cossyra, Arabs, Bent El Rya, daughter of the wind. Black lava and walled gardens, 70 miles fr mainland but just 40 to Africa. Coverd by flowers, vinyards and capes. shaped by fire and wind. Sweet like the “sangue d'oro” wine from french actress Carol Bouquet, as strong and challenging as a swordfish.

Donnafugata vineyards

Maps & Facts

From June to September Pantelleria is connected to the mainland airports of Roma, Milano, Venezia and Bologna and always connected to Trapani and Palermo airports.

Words

Pantelleria is an island of contrast, rough and yet receptive. When the wind blows strong it reminds me of Cornwall, but it is also Africa. The dry walls. The stones. You feel the contacts with the nature's main elements. It struck me for its uniqueness. You really feel as if you are elsewhere, delivered to the forces of nature, to the violent stroke of a strong sun, nourishing and unique. I'm about to leave and I already want to come back. I recognize this immediate nostalgia, because it feels just like love...

Lidia Ravera

In Pantelleria the words were in the wind, I had just to stretch my hand and pick them.
